Fernweh (Sehnsucht nach der Ferne)

When entering the metro noise and a gush of wind will welcome you while descending the stairs as you venture underground.

As you travel the mind tends to wander off and look for the window, staring into the distant until your vision become blurry and you imagination starts to take over. But the dark inner tubes of the metro offer no view to horizons or fantasies, only dark walls occasionally broken by the harsh light of the stops.

Glance into the cocoon and follow a new being to a Tatzelwurm-metro station going from stop to stop while it discovers other travellers. In the corner a slimy mould installation sprouts.

The show consists of a video game, 3d prints and drawings by Glenn De Cock and a installation by Julie De Kezel
